WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

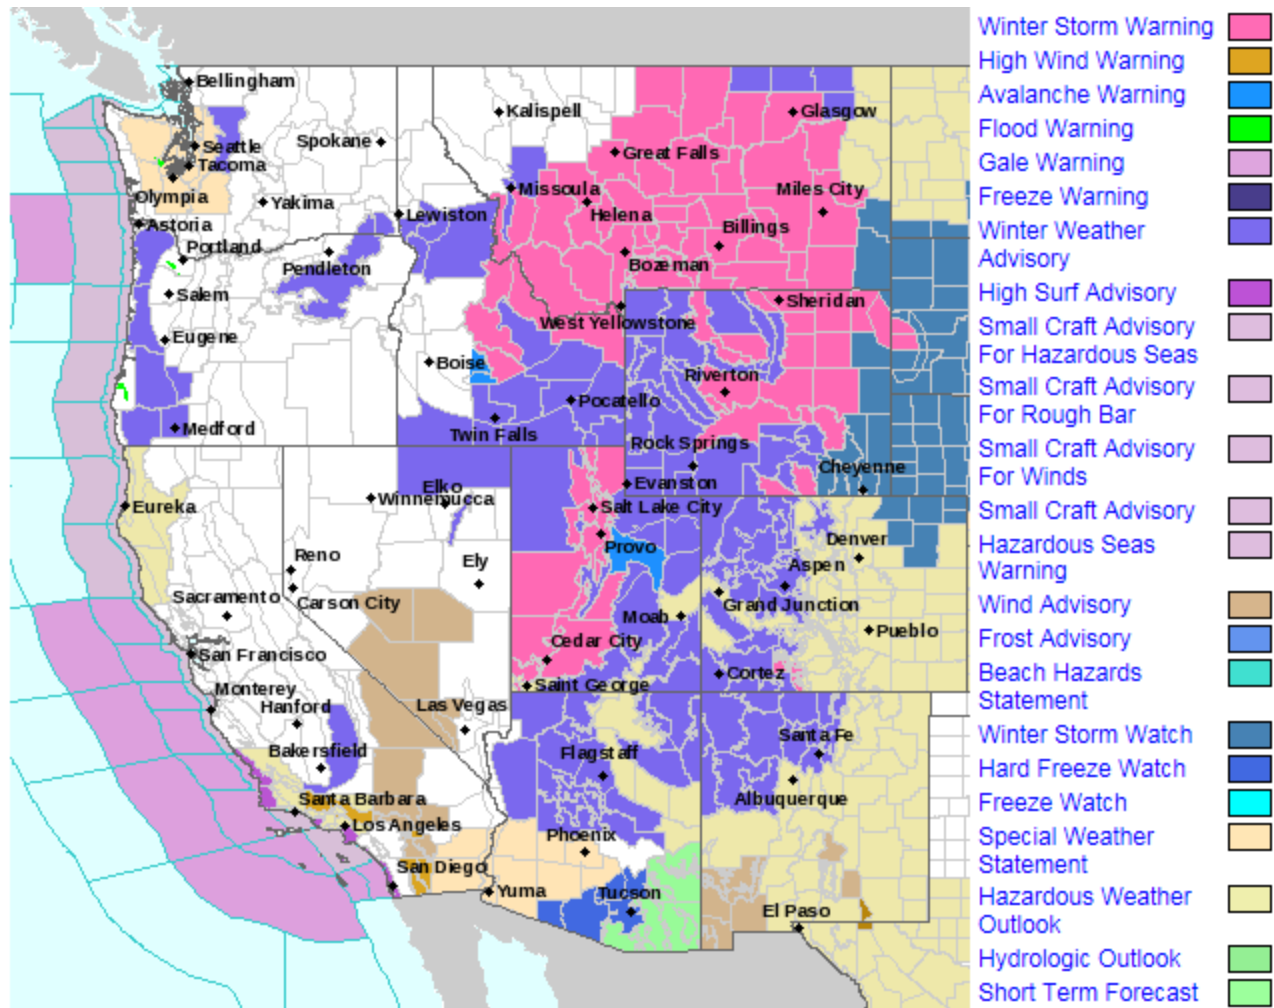

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A low pressure trough moved rapidly through the area yesterday and there is now a low pressure area over Southern Nevada. Today the higher elevations will see a few clouds and maybe a light shower. The valley and lower elevations will be partly to mostly sunny. Gusty north winds will be moving into many areas. Tuesday and Wednesday high pressure will be just off the coast. We will see mostly sunny skies slightly above normal temperatures and light to moderate north winds. Clouds will increase late Wednesday as a weak low pressure trough approach's the coast. Thursday this system will bring light rain to the coastal mountains with a chance of light showers over the northern and eastern mountains with a chance of a light shower in the north valley. Friday another low pressure trough approaches the coast. This system will stretch or split which will make it slow down and weaken. Friday and early Saturday the north state will be partly cloudy to cloudy with a light rain or showers over the coastal and northern mountains and over the Sierra Cascade from Mt. Lassen northward. There is a chance of light showers in the valley north of Red Bluff. Snow levels will be 4000 to 5000 feet. Late Saturday and Sunday a stronger frontal system will bring rain and snow to all of the north state.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Cool and breezy conditions will continue with mostly sunny skies. A gradual warming trend is then expected through the end of the week as high pressure builds aloft and offshore flow develops. However, temperatures will remain below normal through mid-week with near or below freezing overnight lows in many areas. A low pressure system may bring some rain to the region this weekend.
